

With three decades of experience in arts and education management, Anna Kuwabara is executive director of the Albany Symphony, an organization dedicated to transforming lives in the community through the power of music and championing the composers and music of our time in innovative ways. Anna also serves on the advisory group for the National Alliance for Audition Support, an unprecedented initiative to increase diversity in American orchestras.

Prior to her current role, Anna served as VP for orchestra operations & facilities at the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, leading the team handling orchestra personnel, domestic and international touring, stage production, front-of-house management, and facilities; and as an assistant director in career services at the Harvard Business School, working with the career coaching team and MBA students interested in social enterprise and those from international backgrounds. Anna also served as executive vice president and interim president for the Longy School of Music (Cambridge, MA) and as director of operations at the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. A graduate of Yale University and the Haas Business School at UC Berkeley, Anna's personal mission and passion is to help individuals realize their potential.